

It was said that the Archbishop had criticized the position of the Pope towards Ireland. He had only contributed to the Parnell defense fund, as other bishops in the United States had done.

Rome, Feb. 4.—The Osservatore Romano says that a telegram has been received at the Vatican from Archbishop Corrigan of New York in which he denies that in subscribing to the Parnell defense fund he intended to reflect upon the action of the Pope towards Ireland.

An Evening World reporter called at the residence of Archbishop Corrigan this morning to interview him on the subject of his subscription to the Parnell defense fund and his attitude towards the Pope.

The Archbishop, following his inviolable rule in regard to reporters, declined to talk himself, but his secretary, Dr. McDonnell, received the reporter with his usual good nature.

"What can I do for you to-day?" he inquired, as he seated himself.

"I want to know if this report is true about the Archbishop's subscription to the Parnell fund, and the telegram which he sent to Rome declaring that he had intended reflections on the Pope by word or deed," said the reporter.

"It is true that Archbishop Corrigan subscribed to the fund," said Dr. McDonnell. "Several of the bishops of the country have done the same. Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia, subscribed $100, Bishop McGuire, of New York, $50, and many others. The Archbishop's contribution was $100 also. He sent it to Mr. Eugene Kelly."

"There is no conflict between the sentiment in regard to the Pope and the Pope's views in regard to Ireland. The men under trial are the accredited representatives of Ireland and there has been no proof enough that they are dangerous to the peace of the country to justify the feeling among Ireland's friends on this side of the water is that these falsely accused men should have the means of defending themselves, and hence this fund has been started in their behalf."

"The Pope's position in regard to Irish affairs is simply that no improper unconstitutional measures or tactics shall be adopted by the Irish; so you see there is no conflict of opinion. But a telegram was sent to Rome that Archbishop Corrigan had said that the Pope was a meddling meddlesome. When the Archbishop heard of this he called a denial, and declared that he had not questioned the propriety or justice of the Pope's action."

"The agent in Rome who looks after the Archbishop's affairs heard this report and sent word to the Archbishop about it. Here in America such a report might not be so serious, because people make allowances for newspaper ways of putting things; but when some one went to the trouble of calling a report like this about the Archbishop to Rome, it was tantamount to a denial."

"Who sent that cablegram about the Archbishop?" inquired the reporter.

"That I do not know," answered Dr. McDonnell. "I've no idea who it could have been."

"Would a cablegram sent like that by an irresponsible person have much weight in Rome?"

"Well, the very fact of going to the trouble of sending a cablegram about the matter seemed to give some weight to the charge. But as it was sent and was false it was far better to stamp out the thing by a prompt denial, and that is what was done. Of course, the denial of the Archbishop would not be the thing of any credibility it might have had."

"Who is the agent of the Archbishop in Rome?"

"A very efficient exponent of the views of the American bishops, and one who is frequently consulted by the Pope on their interests is Dr. O'Connell, the President of the American College. He was a priest in Virginia for some years, and understands the clergy in this country very thoroughly. He is a brilliant man, who secured the highest honors when he was studying in Rome."

"I think that covers the whole question," said Dr. McDonnell, "and I am glad to have the interview with another good-natured smile."

MONEY PAID FOR STANDS.

One Man Kettles Tells the Commission Practice Was Universal.

At today's investigation by the Commissioners of Accounts into charges made by marketmen as to the allotment of stands in the new market, John Barry, who is in the produce business at 63 Gansevoort street, said he paid for a stand in the market.

"I wouldn't have done so," he explained, "only that the boys were all blackguarding me and having got left, and saying I was in the soup."

The witness said that the practice of giving a consideration for a stand in the old market was so universal that he always considered it right, and he saw nothing wrong about it in the new market.
